Spanish South America had the driest deserts (Atacama), the most thick jungles (Darién) the then considered highest mountains in the World (Andes) and the most isolated valleys and plateaus. Because he was not George Washington. Not even close. Understand what the Latin American Revolutions were. Bolivar sought to extend his control over regions more than a thousand miles south of Bogota, which were also separated by vast jungles, mountain ranges, deserts, areas inhabited by hostile natives and areas with little to no necessary infrastructure. The American colonists had no such problem. Most of the nations of South America declared independence with little mutual assistance from each other, while the t. Continue Reading.
